Looking back over the last few years I am grateful and humbled that you have allowed me to be a part of the Town of Erin's evolution.

Evolution embodies change and I acknowledge that this can be difficult for many of us. To be sure, there have been challenges, but we also have encountered opportunities to be seized. The one thing we have in common is that we are united in our love for the Town of Erin and we care about our community.

Whether you're a lifelong resident or a newcomer eager to explore, Discover Erin invites you to rediscover the charm and energy of our town.

Michael Dehn, Mayor, Town of Erin

Explanation of acknowledgement

The first sentence recognizes that today the people of Erin reside on the traditional territory of the Mississaugas of the Credit First Nation of the Anishinaabe people, from whom this land was purchased by the Crown as the Ajetance Treaty, No.19, 1818.

The second sentence provides the context that the history does not start at the point of European contact.

A storied PAST

One of Erin's liveliest hangouts

has long been a staple of the local community

Story by Alexandra Jagoe

From its beginnings as a doctor's house, to its debut as a hotel and pub, The Busholme has been a local household name for more than a century.

Wherever Mike Magill travels, he says he often seems to find someone who knows about Erin and recognizes the name of the bar that he owns.

"My mom actually worked here in the late 70's," said Magill, whose family has lived in Erin for five generations.

"They used to bolt the tables down to the floor," he said, referring to the bar's early reputation for fighting. He said he thought that was just a rumor, until he found the bolt patterns on the floorboards while pulling up old carpet one day.

This sprawling brick building was built in 1886, with unique stonework above the windows that historians say is exclusive to the Erin area. It's believed that the building was initially intended to be a hospital for the community and served as a home and medical practice for several early physicians.

In 1924, the building was purchased by A.J. Horton and turned into the Horton Hotel, which also provided quarters for the Erin Fire Brigade.

In 1926 the site was purchased by J.P. Bush, a local businessman who ran a hardware store, and named it the Busholme Inn.

The hotel had a licensed room to serve alcohol in the 1930's, which was almost shut down in a town-wide referendum in the 1950's.

Erin's first dam, built by War of 1812 Veteran Henry Trout, was used to grind oats. The site was later converted into a planning mill by Benjamin Mundell, before being consumed by fire in 2013.

According to the late Stephen Thorning, local historian and columnist for the Wellington Advertiser, the vote to shut down the Busholme came after Reeve D.S. Leitch mentioned he would like to see a beer and liquor store open in the town.

This drew the ire of a group in town who launched a campaign to not only prevent the liquor store, but to shut down the local pub.

There was a town-wide vote on the matter in June 1954, which drew a 93 per cent voter turnout.

As a result, 65 per cent of residents voted in favour of liquor sales in the community, and the Busholme lived on.

The venue first became a restaurant in the 1960's as Jolly Roger's, which is why Magill flies the Jolly Roger pirate flag outside the building today.

Magill and co-owner Nicole Magill were given the opportunity to take on the bar in 2016.

They worked to develop "a friendly, all-around venue that offers a bit of something for everybody," said Magill.

In addition to a wide selection of beverages and a robust menu, the Busholme is a popular spot for concerts and musical acts.

"We've had Grammy winners and Juno winners," he said.

Over the years, Magill said he has worked to make upgrades and renovations that are tasteful and respectful to the heritage of the building.

A sign from the old Overland store, a historic shop run by one of the founding families, hangs above a doorway.

Along the walls of the restaurant, there are several prints of historic places around town.

"I just like old stuff," said Magill, after being asked how it feels to run a bar with such a storied history. "I take pride in it."

THINGS TO KNOW ABOUT THE ERIN FARMERS' MARKET

The Erin Farmers' Market is excited to kick off the 2025 season on June 19. Join them every Thursday from 3 to 6:30 p.m. at the spacious agri-dome, located at the Erin Fairgrounds, 184 Main Street, Erin. Shop fresh, local produce, homemade goods, and handcrafted items while supporting area farmers and artisans. It's the perfect way to enjoy community spirit, discover local treasures, and make Thursdays a highlight of your week.

Story by Jennifer Schmelter, Erin Farmers' Market

1. WE'VE BEEN FEEDING THE COMMUNITY SINCE 2012

Since the Erin Farmers' Market began in 2012, we've been cultivating a space for sharing and celebrating local farmers, food and artisans. We outgrew our spot in McMillan Park, and are now located inside the agri-dome at the Erin Fairgrounds. This covered space means we're open rain or shine, and the building is fully accessible with onsite washrooms. Over the years, we've tried several days and locations, but we find Thursday afternoons work well for both our customers and vendors. Each farmers' market in Wellington County happens on a different day of the week, allowing shoppers to visit other markets, and vendors to participate in multiple markets each season.

2. WE'RE A "TRUE" FARMERS' MARKET

The Erin Farmers' Market is proud to be a true farmers' market. We prioritize local farmers first and foremost. This commitment means that over 50 per cent of our vendors are actual farmers who grow or produce what they sell. It's a guiding principle that helps us support local agriculture and give shoppers access to fresh, in-season, locally grown food.

With our longstanding producer priority rule, we acknowledge the time and effort it takes to grow perishable produce. If we do have resellers at the market (meaning vendors selling food that they themselves did not grow or produce), we require that those vendors step back from offering a particular item if a farm is selling that same item and grew it themselves. Once the farm has sold out of their item or it is no longer in season, the reseller may once again sell that product. For example, if there's a farm growing strawberries, the season for harvesting field berries is roughly late June to mid-July. So during those three or four weeks, a reseller cannot sell strawberries. But once strawberry season is over for our farm vendor, the reseller is welcome to bring in berries sourced from a food depot or other farm. This ensures that our local farmers putting in the hard work each week can be supported by our community.

3. WE SUPPORT OVER 1,000 ACRES OF LOCAL FARMLAND

In 2024, we supported 18 farms within 45 km (40 minutes) of the Erin Fairgrounds, from a 0.04-acre mushroom farm to a 400-acre cattle farm. While most farms also sell their products from their on-farm stores and/or at other local markets, the Erin Farmers' Market continues to be an important component in their sales and marketing plans.

4. OUR SEASONAL OFFERINGS FOR 2025

As of mid-April, we have 18 vendors confirmed for the 2025 season. These include our market regulars: 4th Line Cattle Co., Calehill Farms, Cedar Valley Honey, Coyote Hollow Farms, Little Deer Drive, Mel Bailey, Smokey Hollow and Tanner's Pumpkins, as well as a selection of new farms and prepared food vendors.

We know that our customers are looking for fresh fruit and vegetables, which is why every farm that applied to the market has been accepted. We look forward to showcasing a variety of local meats, produce, honey, maple syrup, microgreens, flowers, wine, preserves, breads, treats and handcrafted items.

5. WE SUPPORT MANY LOCAL BUSINESSES AND ENTREPRENEURS

The Erin Farmers' Market exists to provide a forum for the sale of local products and goods. We provide a low-cost entry point for small businesses which cannot afford a storefront or wholesale production. Businesses may come for one two seasons to test new products, get customer feedback or attract a new group of clients. Some stay on year after year, while others go on to open their own shops or sell wholesale to stores. In this way, we play an important role in the local economy. We also offer booth space at no charge for local non-profits, charity groups, and young entrepreneurs.

Kneading a little love

Woolen Mill Kitchen inspires passion for cooking with classes for all ages

Story by Alexandra Jagoe

Is there any better way to connect with others, than through food?

That's what Erin's Claire Bell has been doing inside her own kitchen over the past three years, offering tailored cooking classes for youth, adults and seniors.

Woolen Mill Kitchen hosts a series of classes, from youth summer camps, bachelorette experiences, pasta-making and even personalized sessions.

"I think it's really important for people to get excited about food," said Bell, who worked as an elementary school teacher in England before moving to Erin.

She would do cooking sessions with children that aligned with their school curriculum, for example, a class on making soda bread and chowder while learning about the Vikings.

Here in Canada, Bell is hosting culinary classes for youth, teaching them how to make pasta, sushi, tapas, and all sorts of other tasty treats.

"I wanted to use my skills as an educator, my passion for food and purposeful learning," she said, explaining that "our home provides the perfect welcoming and warm space to provide creative and meaningful learning opportunities where children can develop self-confidence and independence, alongside developing culinary and life skills."

Last summer she held a week-long camp where kids held a cooking presentation at the Erin Farmer's Market, making tacos.

"They demonstrated how to make tortillas," she said, smiling as she remembered how they made mango salsa and smoothies, offering samples of the delicious drink at the market.

She said that participants also learn about dining etiquette, knife skills, and proper cleaning, gaining a sense of pride in their work, after hosting a dinner or meal for parents at the end.

From May to September, she holds specific hosting events, where youth prepare high tea for parents and grandparents, and a BBQ for siblings. The sessions focus on providing young cooks with practical life skills to apply to real-life situations.

Woolen Mill Kitchen offers adult sessions including classes on Thai cuisine, Italian, French and even summer tapas.

“You’re coming for a night with friends,” Bell said, describing the relaxed atmosphere of her kitchen, where guests can mingle and get to know each other, dining on the balcony in the summer overlooking the credit river.

She also hosts a series called Hearth and Soul Open Kitchen, a relaxed group cooking series on mid-week mornings. Participants have the chance to bake irresistibly fluffy bread, lovely desserts and even craft the perfect risotto.

For more information about Woolen Mill Kitchen’s classes, go to www.woolenmillkitchen.com

Hidden GEMS

Erin's 'shop in a shed' a treasure-trove of timeless wonders

Story by Alexandra Jagoe

Down a quiet residential street in Erin village lies an enchanting little shop, filled with beauty, history and unique antiques.

The Wright Attitude Shoppe in a Shed, offers a wealth of eclectic finds from fine bone China, shimmering decanters, detailed paintings, timeless furniture and even a set of military medals.

Standing inside his shop, 81-year-old John Wright looked around at his collection of goods, bought at auctions, second-hand stores and even refurbished after being rescued from the side of the road.

Sets of vintage dinnerware were carefully arranged at tables, sideboards set up with lamps and walls of shelves and paintings lined the building.

Every corner offered a new discovery, a unique item just waiting for its next home.

"I've just been interested in it since I was a teenager," Wright said, of antiques and home décor.

He opened his first antique shop in Erin Village in 1994, renting out a spot along Main Street for weekends during the summer, before opening a more permanent location.

When he retired from his airline industry career in 2001, Wright began to explore his passion further, later opening a small shop called the Annex inside Beaver Mills Design.

In May 2020 the 'shop in the shed' was born.

After hosting successful yard sales and setting the shed up for several dinner parties, Wright decided to turn it into a little store.

"It's not necessarily about selling," he said, adding that putting a smile on visitor's faces is the most important thing. "I like the people that come."

Wright had a complete set of Royal Albert flower of the month teacups that he wanted to sell as a set but soon learned that many wanted to buy the individual cup for their own birth month.

Thinking back to how he wanted to keep the collection complete, he realized he was able to make many people happy by selling the cups individually.

He says some are enamored when they walk in, taking in all the details around them, while others are on the hunt for something in particular.

Wright chooses pieces that catch his eye, things he likes, for the shed.

Unfortunately, he doesn't know the story behind many of the items he carries.

"I do research what I can," he said, explaining that often paintings bought at auctions come with notes or a story.

Other items, however, are rescued from the trash before Wright breathes new life into them.

"I have a passion for chairs," he said, remembering a

Chippendale loveseat he found at the Belwood dump, which was rejuvenated with reupholstering. “You make it into a showpiece.”

A set of 1920’s art deco period chairs sit inside his shop, with black and white fabric.

“I drove by one of those for three days,” he said, while on his way out to Judy’s restaurant.

As he stopped and picked up the chair, a man came running out and asked if he would like its match.

Now, reupholstered, they sit ready to brighten up someone’s home.

“This is what I grew up with and I appreciate it. What I’ve worked with all of my life,” he said of the antiques. “It just warms up the place and gives you a sense of history too.”

The Wright Attitude Shoppe in a Shed is located at 12 Spring St. and is open Friday, Saturday and Sunday, 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. or by appointment.

How to shop for ANTIQUES

Shopping for antiques can be a rewarding experience, offering the chance to discover unique, historical, and often valuable items. Whether you’re a seasoned collector or just starting out, a few tips can help you navigate the world of antique shopping with confidence.

Do your homework

Start by doing your research. Understanding the styles, periods, and types of antiques you’re interested in—such as Victorian furniture, mid-century modern décor, or vintage glassware—will help you recognize authentic pieces and avoid reproductions. Books, online resources, and antique experts are excellent sources of information.

Inspect items thoroughly

Always inspect items carefully. Look for signs of authenticity such as maker’s marks, craftsmanship, and signs of age. Be cautious of damage or excessive restoration, which can affect value. If you’re considering a significant purchase, it may be worth having the item appraised.

Don’t rush it

Take your time to browse carefully and thoughtfully. Antique shopping is not a rushed activity—it’s about exploring, discovering, and learning. Each piece has its own history and character, and the joy often lies in the hunt itself. As you walk through Wright Attitude Shoppe in a Shed, allow yourself to look closely at different items, even those you may not have considered at first glance. Hidden gems often reveal themselves when you’re not in a hurry.

Charming pieces

Lastly, buy what you love. While value and rarity are important, choosing pieces that resonate with your personal taste ensures your collection is both meaningful and enjoyable. Antique shopping is not just about acquiring items—it’s about discovering stories and adding character to your home.

SOWING SUCCESS

These Erin groups are building local food security by encouraging home gardening

Story by Alexandra Jagoe

On a crisp, cold Saturday morning, sunlight streamed through the windows of Erin United Church.

Dozens sat in the rows of wooden church pews, intently listening to the speaker standing at the front of the room.

“A pumpkin and a zucchini are the same species,” said Rebecca Ivanoff, seed program manager with the Ecological Farmer’s Association of Ontario.

She paced back and forth, giving an animated presentation on growing plants to harvest their seeds, cleaning them, and keeping them safe to plant the next year. She touched on cross pollination, and in what circumstances growers need to prevent it and how in others it can help produce a heartier, more genetically diverse crop.

“Seed is such a gift to us and teaches us about generosity,” she said, finishing her talk with a quote from Janisse Ray, author of The Seed Underground: A Growing Revolution to Save Food. “I want to tell you about the most hopeful thing in the world. It is a seed.”

The Erin Seed Library is sowing a lot of hope.

Since its inception in 2017, Jennifer Edwards has grown a publicly available cache of seeds that operates on the premise “borrow, learn, grow, return.”

The group hosts “Seedy Saturdays,” where speakers like Ivanoff give talks on gardening and offer space for vendors and other seed producers.

“At first I was really worried about signing seeds out because I was worried I wouldn’t get any back,” she said. “I started getting more and more seeds. Now I don’t even worry about it. I just want people to garden.”

Edwards says that growing food gives residents a certain autonomy, avoids pesticides used in many commercial farms and is a cost-effective alternative to expensive organic produce.

“When you save your own seeds, you’re preserving a species,” she said, adding that there are different strains of just about every vegetable. “There’s a lot of variety when you grow from seeds.”

Seedy Saturdays have exploded in popularity across Ontario, and now Edwards tries to coordinate Erin events not to fall on the same date as other local seed exchanges.

“I think people just want more food sovereignty for themselves. You can grow your own tomatoes, you can grow your own peas...there’s so many easy things you can grow yourself,” said Edwards. “It is a lot of work, you have to water it, you have to take care of it, but then it’s just right there outside your back door.”

Edwards said she is often invited to come see the gardens growing seeds from the library and gets the seeds back, ready to be shared again.

“It’s so nice that people have pride in what they’ve grown themselves,” she said.

Throughout the summer, Edwards tends to several gardens, including one at a local school, which even sprouts asparagus in the spring.

“The coolest thing for kids to grow is broccoli,” she said.

There’s another Erin group working to build food security and independence too—Seed to Plate, which turns bumper crops of local fruits and veggies into meals for the community.

Organizer Abel Page secured funding from Our Food Future Guelph Wellington and with support of the Town of Erin, set up a community fridge at the front doors of Centre 2000. Now, members of the community help keep the unit stocked and ready for anyone who needs it.

“It’s a very powerful project,” said Page, adding that the initial objective was to help eliminate food waste and encourage residents to grow their own food through several workshops.

Since then, it has blossomed into a valuable local resource through the community fridge.

“We have some donors that are giving regularly,” he said, noting that there are often online posts when the fridge is restocked. “People are very grateful.”

Edwards hopes that Seedy Saturday visitors not only take home some seeds from the event but learn valuable lessons about growing their own food and try something new.

She said even starting out small, with a few pots inside under a lamp is a valuable first step.

“I think everyone has a role in the seed system,” said Ivanoff, explaining that her job is to help increase the quality, quantity and diversity of seeds growing in Ontario.

Speaking to an eager crowd of gardeners with a plethora of seeds at their fingertips does just that.

“It brings me a lot of joy to share that with people,” she said.

Over Here Community Arts Adventure:

Connecting through creativity and collaboration

Story by Karen Martin-Robbins

On the side of the Hillsburgh Community Centre, five large, vibrant wooden circles—interlocking like gears—are mounted on the wall. Each one represents a different group within the community, working together in harmony.

“Over 11 months, countless community members, special interest groups, council committees and volunteers worked to bring this vision to life,” explains Melissa Auchincloss, a Hillsburgh artist and co-founder of Over Here Community Arts Adventure, the organization behind this striking public art piece.

The artwork, titled Gear Up, is more than just eye-catching. “These gears represent how our community comes together,” said Jennifer McKinnon, who co-founded the non-profit alongside Auchincloss. “Each one symbolizes a unique part of our town, working in sync to drive positive change.”

Gear Up is just one of many projects ignited by Over Here Community Arts Adventure—a growing initiative that’s putting Erin and Hillsburgh on the creative map.

How It Started

The idea took shape during the last gasps of the COVID-19 pandemic, when isolation left many feeling disconnected.

“We felt the pandemic had weakened our sense of community,” said Auchincloss, a painter and photographer. “We wanted to create something that would welcome newcomers and inspire participation.”

As their town grew, Auchincloss and McKinnon saw art as a powerful way to bridge gaps and build connections.

“Art—whether it’s painting, cooking, dancing—relieves stress, sparks conversation, and gives people a healthy outlet,” Auchincloss said. With the backing of Two Sisters Growing Brands, they launched Over Here with a clear mission: foster creativity, collaboration, and community.

“When we create together, we produce art that’s bigger, grander and more unique than anything we could achieve alone,” said Auchincloss.

Making Connections

Since its launch, Over Here has been busy. The group has hosted events like Arts by the Pond, launched the Arts Ruralz Trail, and partnered with the Hillsburgh Library to showcase local talent in a rotating gallery exhibit.

Local acrylic painter Nancy Ladner believes the initiative is filling an important gap. “There are so many hidden artists in this area,” she said. “We’re not always visible—that’s why groups like Over Here are so important.”

Sandra Barret, who doesn’t consider herself an artist, joined the team to help with organization and outreach. She helped bring together creatives for the first Arts by the Pond, an event that drew poets, painters, musicians, and more to the library grounds. “It was infectious to see people sharing their passion,” she said.

The event returns this year on June 8.

Celebrating Rural Art

Another ambitious project from Over Here is the Arts Ruralz Trail, a collection of public and private art installations spread across the region’s scenic rural landscape. The trail encourages exploration while spotlighting local creativity in unexpected places.

Among the upcoming installations is The Caboose Hop, designed by artist Jefferson Campbell-Cooper. His concept will be unveiled at this year’s Arts by the Pond, with full construction slated for 2026. The piece will involve both professional and community collaboration, and feature a QR code linking to a documentary on Hillsburgh’s railway history.

The film is being produced by Over Here members, including Barret and Steve Bergwerff of Iron Cloud Productions. “I learned so much while working on it,” Barret said. In her research, she even located Hillsburgh’s historic train station—still standing today at Island Lake Conservation Area.

Supporting Local Artists

Another cornerstone of the initiative is the Gallery Over Here by the Pond, located inside the Hillsburgh Library. The rotating exhibit showcases both emerging and established artists from the area, offering them a welcoming platform to share their work.

The group is also running a lineup of creative workshops—from French Cookery with Chef Gui to Discover Rural Beauty through Plein Air Painting.

“Arts and culture often get overlooked in small towns,” McKinnon said. “Over Here is a way to shine a light on our creative community and make art accessible to everyone—newcomers and long-time residents alike.”

With its blend of imagination, inclusion, and grassroots energy, Over Here Community Arts Adventure is transforming Hillsburgh and Erin—one project, one artist, and one community connection at a time.

Escape to Wonderland at Erin's Maddie Hatter tea shop

Story by Karen Martin-Robbins

If Lewis Carroll had ever dreamed up a tea house for modern times, chances are it would look a lot like Maddie Hatter Tea Shop.

Nestled in the heart of downtown Erin, this charming little spot invites guests to do something many adults forget to do—slow down, unplug, and play.

From the moment you step inside Maddie’s, it’s clear this isn’t just a restaurant—it’s an experience.

“I’ve always loved Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland,” said owner Dora Pulcina. “It’s a story full of curiosity, creativity, and whimsy. I wanted to bring that same energy into the real world—a place that feels like a break from the everyday chaos. Where you can just escape for a few hours.”

The décor is delightfully over-the-top, with teacup towers that seem to defy gravity, quotes from the classic novel hand-painted onto walls and signs, and an abundance of clocks that don’t tell time—an ode to the Mad Hatter’s famous tea party where time stands still.

“When you go to Wonderland, you lose track of time. That’s what we want you to do when you come here too. Escape from the everyday,” explains Pulcina.

The entire concept of the tea house draws inspiration from that very tea party.

“The name Maddie’s comes from the idea of the Mad Hatter’s daughter, Maddie Hatter,” Pulcina said. “She grew up surrounded by whimsy and decided to carry on the legacy with a tea shop of her own. That story became the heartbeat of everything we created.”

The family business opened in 2017 and despite obstacles such as the Covid pandemic, has seen remarkable growth.

Part of the appeal is that Maddie’s isn’t just beautiful—it’s personal.

Many of the design touches were handcrafted by Pulcina herself. “I wanted the space to feel like someone’s creative dream came to life,” she said. “I stacked teapots and cups in quirky, slightly tilted ways. I tucked hats into unexpected corners. Everything was designed to feel lived-in, loved, and a little offbeat—just like Wonderland.”

But perhaps the most delightful part of the décor is the hats.

“We have hats everywhere—not just on display, but for guests to actually wear. It’s become a whole thing. People take pictures in them while sipping tea, and we have hundreds of photos of guests laughing, posing, and really getting into the spirit of it. It’s like we’ve all gone back to being kids, playing tea party again.”

And let's not forget the tea.

The afternoon tea has become the most popular dish on the menu served on a three-tiered plate with delectable home-made scones, loose-leaf tea, jam and devon cream.

"I love afternoon tea," said Pulcina, who went on a two-week trip through London's finest tea rooms for research. "But I wanted to create something more accessible, more relaxed, and just as memorable."

Maddie's serves over 25 loose-leaf blends, all crafted from premium ingredients.

The restaurant is also licensed—cue the Pink Flamingo cocktail and bottomless mimosas.

Along with the drink choices, the restaurant has a mouthwatering à la carte menu with comfort foods such as homemade soups, mac and cheese and Shepherd's pie.

"We try to give our customers a fun environment and good food for a memorable experience," Pulcina said.

The HR specialist became a restaurant owner after coming to realize she wanted a creative outlet in her life. Her children and husband help out at the business, either working behind the counter or fixing things behind the scenes.

"In our house, 'Maddie' is like a member of our family," she jokes.

The restaurant is a popular spot on weekends – especially since the tea shop was featured in a Narcity news article and then turned up on several "top ten tea house" tourism lists.

"People like visiting small towns and taking day trips for dates or family outings. Erin is a great destination for that," Pulcina said.

Special events are also a huge draw – with people hosting birthday parties, bridal showers or family gatherings.

The main restaurant seats about 30 but there is also a small space next door, called the Rabbit Hole.

"Every adventure requires a first step," Pulcina quotes from the famous novel. "Opening Maddie's was mine. And now I get to invite people into that adventure every day."

LOOKING BACK

Phil Gravelle is a local historian and a former columnist with the Erin Advocate newspaper where his popular Looking Back history column was published weekly for many years. As an ode to Erin's rural heritage, we at Discover Erin are pleased to share Looking Back with you and hope you enjoy a trip down memory lane with us.

From the Advocate – 110 years ago (1915)

The Acton Tanning Company is running day and night with orders for army saddles, bridles and harnesses. Recruiting has begun for Canada's Third Contingent, to be comprised of 13 regiments of mounted rifles and 22 battalions of infantry. Reeve C. Overland was in Guelph last week for a meeting of the committee appointed by County Council for distribution of the Patriotic Fund, which is being raised throughout Wellington County by a special assessment on the ratepayers.

From the Advocate – 55 years ago (1970)

About 100 people came out to Erin District High School for a demonstration of square dancing put on by the Acton Pairs and Squares group, with about 60 participating and learning the moves. There are plans for ten Saturday night sessions. Physical fitness classes are also being planned by the Recreation Board. They will be visiting Scarborough, where Larry Gregson is Director of Recreation, to get some program ideas for Erin.

An Advocate editorial said: Crossing Main Street in the business section of Erin Village has become a daring and frustrating act, due to a tremendous increase in traffic on Highway 24. The main reason for crossing the road is, of course, the post office on the east side of Main. And who doesn't cross over there, at least once a day? A cross-walk appears to be the solution. Pedestrians are assured of crossing safely without a long, impatient wait. The motorist is aware of the crossing, and is relieved of the uncertainty of a sudden darting in front of him, at any time, any place along the street. The cost of such an endeavour – mini. The need – maxi.

From the Advocate – 35 years ago (1990)

A Ballinafad family escaped unharmed as an early morning fire caused about $350,000 in damage to a home and vehicles last Thursday. Four fire departments responded, but Hillsburgh Fire Chief Wayne McIsaac said the house was fully engulfed in flames when they arrived. Resident Bonnie Walker said she was awakened at 2 a.m. by a smoke detector. With thick smoke coming up the stairs, she and her teenaged children Diane and Jeff tied sheets together and escaped through a bedroom window.

Building activity in Erin Township was down in 1989 from the previous two years, while the cost of constructing new homes was up sharply. There were 209 building applications, compared to 239 in 1988 and 265 in 1987. The average cost of a housing start has been rising: $90,412 in 1987, $118,237 in 1988 and $135,666 in 1989. There were 24 swimming pools installed in 1989, and Building Official Ray Hall said it was probably because of the unusually hot summer of 1988.

From the Advocate – 25 years ago (2000)

A break and enter has caused serious damage at Rainbow Pizzeria on Main Street in Erin. The business has been closed for some time undergoing renovations. The OPP said entry was gained through a basement window. A water pipe was opened and the building was ransacked, but nothing was stolen.

The huge windows at the new Erin library were installed last week, and the Erin Millennium Committee is making plans for a Grand Opening in August.

Joyce Graham, in her Hillsburgh Highlights column, reports that Jeannie Wagenaar will be retiring from her duties as a teller at the Royal Bank on Friday. Patrons are invited to stop in during the afternoon for cake and coffee. Jeannie started with the bank part-time in 1968 and became full-time in 1976.
